Triennial Conference Program

Canberra ACT

17, 18, 19 October 2018

Welcome

National President's Welcome

This is a very exciting conference with delegates from NCW Constituent Councils, Associate and Affiliates members from all around Australia including members of the National Council of Young Women of Australia. I am also very happy to welcome members of the public, government representatives and other interested people.

The first NCWA conference was held in Melbourne in November 1932 with May Moss as President, after the establishment of the NCWA in 1931. The NCWA had been envisaged as an umbrella organisation to speak to government with one voice on Federal issues on behalf of the women of Australia. I am proud to say we are still doing that today as we agree on our resolutions to take to the Federal Government, along with the outcomes from the conference.

This Conference builds on the NCWA Mid Term Conference where we examined the root causes of violence against women and homelessness for older women. This Triennial Conference provides us with the opportunity to take that knowledge further and work towards finding solutions to these very vexed and intractable problems.

NCWA is delighted to have some of Australia's leading experts in the field at the Triennial Conference, including the Minister for Women, other Members of Federal Parliament and academics who will provoke and challenge our thinking. There is a mix of speakers, panels and a Q&A session to inform us. There are breaks where we have time to gather our thoughts and have table discussions about the issues and come forward with ideas for solutions to the problems.

In addition to the Triennial Conference, the first NCWA awards will be presented where we acknowledge NCW women and recognise them for their selfless work and contribution as change makers and positive role models. There are three awards – an Encouragement Award, Senior Service Award and NCWA Woman of the Year.

I commend this Triennial Conference to you to listen, learn, speak, share to find solutions to make a difference.
